from the initial collection of tea leaves to the eventual production of three categories of tea including green tea, oolong tea and black tea.

At the first stage, tea leaves have to be prepared by being picked by farmers from tea trees. As soon as those leaves have been collected sufficiently, their moisture is removed immediately. Subsequently, three distinct methods are adopted for different kinds of tea. As for green tea, the next process consists of merely one step: steam tea leaves, which is the most time-efficient way compared with the other two kinds of tea making process where air seasoning is involved. In order to make oolong tea, the leaves are rolled before being exposed to air for 4 hours. Meanwhile, in the manufacturing of small leaf black tea, it takes as long as 2 days to air tea leaves after they have been crushed into smaller pieces. Finally, these leaves will become dried.

To sum up, it is important to note that there are varying requirements in the manufacture of different kinds of tea.

范文	An ever increasing number of the young these days are die-hard fans of international celebrities, such as pop and movie stars but unfortunately pay little attention to prominent historical figures in their own home country, an unhealthy but universal phenomenon that will take a heavy toll on those young people themselves as well as the society as a whole. The mass media is the principal contributor to this phenomenon. That media excessively expose popular shows that are exclusively about

these pop stars on TV, the Internet, and instant information on phones and employ them advertise are mainly responsible for this. Bombarded with different information, especially the gossip, about famous stars anytime and anywhere, young people have thus become gradually familiar with almost everything with those stars, and even become fanatical fans implicitly. It is the effects of fans that empower entertainment companies to invite those stars to endorse their products, and this win-win strategy not just enhances the recognition of international pop stars but also helps these companies advertise their products. But few media or advertisers will introduce the well-known people in the history in headlines ,let alone invites them to advertise their products, so that the younger generation then overlook them even though they have made way more significant contributions to society than those pop stars.

In reversing this negative trend, the mass media itself is the most effective and efficient shortcut. In other words, the mass media need to assume the responsibility for bringing historical celebrities into the very focus of young people and for increasing their media exposure. The entertainment industry should commit itself to filming the story of their life or inviting them as its brand spokesman. In this way, the young will realize that it is those celebrities who are the core of the society and that without them the society would not progress so fast.

In conclusion, the mass media are the chief culprit behind this trend but what they will do is also the critical factor in changing the current situation.
